Construction Loan FAQ's:

What is a construction loan?

A construction loan is short-term financing that can be used to cover the costs associated with building a house, from start to finish.

How do I qualify for a construction loan?

In addition to traditional borrower standards, such as a favorable credit score, debt-to-income ratio, and steady income, your lender must also approve your construction budget, plans, draw schedule, and the contractor you choose. You may be limited on the amount you can borrow, so it's a good idea to have a healthy amount of reserves saved.

How do construction loans work?

You'll make interest-only payments during the construction period while the loan is paying the contractors in regular installments, called "draws", based on how much work has been done. After the project is complete, the permanent financing terms will need to be established with the lender.

Do I have to own the land/lot before building?

You have the option to roll the cost of the land into the construction loan. If you already own land, the equity that you have in that land can count towards the borrower's minimum investment in the construction loan.

Where do I start?

First, get pre-approved with Assurance Financial so you know what your budget will be. We'll walk you through every step from there.
